The political situation in Sri Lanka, impeded by popular dissatisfaction and religious and ethnic tensions, is increasingly volatile ahead of December elections. On top of political uncertainty, higher security risk in the aftermath of the Easter attack is constraining domestic demand.

New Democracy’s election victory and its promise for business-friendly reforms has increased business and consumer confidence. This supports the stable outlook but very high government debt will continue to weigh on growth potential in the coming years.

Structural reforms and policy continuity are priorities for the new government of Ukraine, underpinning brighter prospects for macroeconomic stability. Government debt is on a downward trajectory and relations with international institutions are improving.
